CASE STUDY: On the edge of historic Lexington Common, this home witnessed the confrontation that marked the beginning of the American Revolution with the Battle of Lexington on April 19, 1775. After the battle, Samuel Adams exclaimed to John Hancock, "What a glorious morning for America!"

The replacement of the carriage house was planned carefully to maintain the historic integrity of the site and home. Vermont Natural Coatings PolyWhey® floor finish was chosen for its premium attributes and safety.

"The confrontation at Lexington Common over 200 years ago launched a nation. Today, Vermont Natural Coatings is launching a new revolution in the coatings industry," says VNC president and founder Andrew Meyer. "Our mission to create safer and better products is our own Coatings Enlightenment."

"Our home and lives have been intertwined with the history of the Revolution. Using PolyWhey for our renovation was a perfect fit."
